Medal of Honor

Medal of Honor was a passion project that emerged during Spielberg's work on the film Saving Private Ryan, with development of the game beginning on November 11, 1997.

According to game producer Peter Hirschmann, the studio's corporate management was worried that World War II was dated, and players were more interested in "ray guns, hell-spawn and laser rifles".

LEGEND OF THE FORTRESS

The game takes its name from Krogh's fortress, Ishar, whose name means "unknown" in the game's fictional elf language.

In order to achieve this, the player's characters must travel across the whole island.

To meet with the surviving companions of Jarel.

Most of Ishar takes place in an outdoor environment, which was original for computer role playing games of the time.

It also featured a unique system to change the lineup of player characters: the player can have up to five characters at the same time, but each one will like or dislike his comrades.

These preferences come into play when the player tries to recruit or dismiss a character, because the other characters will then vote for or against the recruitment or dismissal.

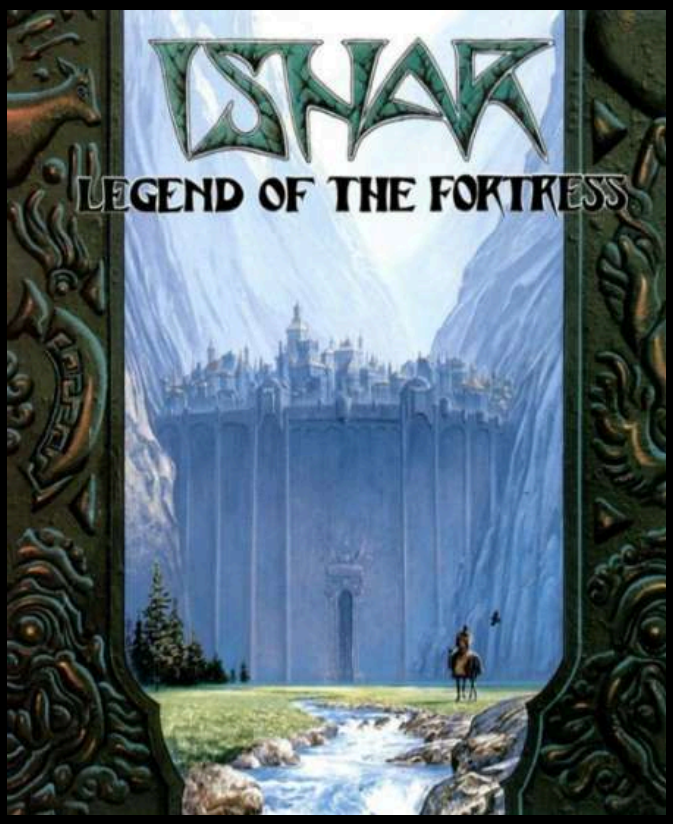
LEGEND OF THE FORTRESS



If a character cannot be dismissed by a vote, it is possible for the player to have him assassinated by another character, but there is a risk that other characters will murder the murderer himself, possibly creating a chain of murders that slays the whole party but one.

In order to make a save game the player had to pay 1000 gold pieces from the party's inventory. Ishar: Legend of the Fortress had Good Reviews across the board.

And took advantage of the Amiga`s Advanced Graphics Architecture Which was a first on the Amiga for any Role playing game.
